Introduction

The Indian Restaurant industry today, is worth a confounding Rs.247,680 crores and is rising at a annual pace of 11% – predictable to hit Rs.408,040 crores by 2018. This development has been boosted by a blend of aspects: the development of the huge Indian middle class, quick urbanization, mounting knowledge of western way of life, more women amalgamation the labor force and superior disposable income, to name a few.

Post GST, the Government is considering the chance to create an added collection through nearer observation of tariff and collection from the unorganized sector. In short, the eatery business is visibly a hot section, and this calls for a complete insight on the impact of GST on restaurants.

Impact of GST on restaurant proprietors

The restaurant proprietors concerned, GST is a mixed bag. In the earlier system, the proprietors did not have an choice to correct the output service tax accountability aligned with the input VAT on product consumed. Under GST, both service tax and VAT have been included under GST, and thus, in spite of goods or services, the credit of input tax will be available for alteration adjacent to the output liability. This will help optimize the operational capital of restaurants in general, which they will be able to pass on to their clients, in terms of improved prices and improved food quality, a positive GST impact on restaurants.

In the GST system, e-commerce firms will have to subtract tax collected at source (TCS) at 2% (1% each of CGST and SGST) when they make payments to restaurants or merchant using their platform. This will visibly interrupt the working capital of minor restaurants with lesser sales volumes and prevent them from going online. While restaurants will still be able to state input tax credit and get a refund for the TCS that they paid, but until that reimbursement appears, that amount of operational capital will stay blocked.

Though, an additional nuisance is jump to be the facet of compulsory GST registration for all restaurants, who use e-commerce services, irrespective of turnover. That could be a tax load many will not be relaxed with, and could have a unconstructive GST impact on hotels.

GST on restaurant clients

The one and only point of interest for most food lovers who love to dine out will be – the GST rates on restaurants. Let us try to understand how the taxes on a food bill look like in the GST regime, compared to the previous regime.

Previous regime

In the preceding regime, dining at a customary AC restaurant was measured to be a supply of both goods and services – which is why VAT as well as Service Tax was pertinent. On top of the same, one would find the various cesses, such as Krishi Kalyan Cess and Swachch Bharat Cess being applied on the price.

In short, the taxes applicable were:

- VAT, depending on state=12.5% to 14.5%
- Service Tax, considering 60% abatement on 15% standard rate = 6.0%
- Krishi Kalyan Cess = 0.2%
- Swachch Bharat Cess = 0.2%
- Total Effective Tax = 18.9% to 20.9%

Thus, the preceding regime of numerous taxes had a complex levy of both Service Tax and VAT on food and beverages served in hotels which made up to nearly 21% of tax to be shelled out from the pocket of the end consumers.

GST regime

The major impact of GST on hotels and restaurants in the GST regime is that supply of food and beverages will be considered as a delivery of services. Under GST, Service Tax, VAT and all other indirect taxes which were being charged earlier, will be counted.

As per the GST Council, the following are the GST rates on restaurants –

- Non – AC Restaurants – 12%
- AC Restaurants – 18%
- 5 Star Hotels & Restaurants – 28%

- Small Restaurants & Eateries – 5% (Under Composition Scheme) paid by hotel on their revenue, wherein there is a possibility of this load being passed on the consumer.

However, as talk about earlier, alcohol will be out of the purview of GST, and thus liquor will attract VAT, as forced by the particular states. So, if one orders intoxicating beverages and food, one pays GST on food and VAT on intoxicating beverages.

Service charge? – to pay or not to pay

Service Charge was being charged even in the preceding regime, but among the levy of taxes, it was potentially measured by many clients as “just another tax”. Thanks to the clearness of taxation brought in by GST, the service charge query has come to the front.

To begin with, service charge is not a tax. The government has not planned for any restaurant to levy service charge, and this is a charge, which is charged by restaurants as per their own diplomacy. In other words, one can call it as a “tips”, which is usually considered at 10% of the price of food foodstuffs that one orders. Ideally talking, it should be totally the customer’s call on whether they wish for pay service charge or not, and even the central and state governments in current times, have explained, that a consumer can potentially sue any restaurant concern, if compelled to pay the same.

GST on fast-food outlets

Now apply that to fast-food outlets and to having a simple cup of tea as well. If you finished up having that cup of chai meeting in an AC restaurant, you pay a 18% tax on the tea; if you want save money on this, you know what to do – you can have the tea exterior and get gone with paying just 12% for the beverage practice.

Needless to say, this has been very baffling for both consumers and business-owners who have not yet seized the shades of the GST system yet.

Establishment Type and Services	GST Rate Applicable
At establishments with turnover of <INR 75 lakh	5% (Composition Scheme) without ITC
Non-AC restaurants not serving alcohol	12% with ITC
Non-AC restaurants serving alcohol	18% with ITC
Restaurants with AC or Central heating (whether serving or not serving alcohol)	18% with ITC

Partly AC and partly non-AC restaurants (includes those serving and those not serving alcohol)	18% with ITC
AC Restaurants inside 5-Star Hotels	18% with ITC

Changes based on 23rd GST Council Announcements

In this context, it may be said that a lot of transparency has come about in how food bills shall now be calculated.

That said, many restaurants right away increased their prices with effect to the GST crush perceptive completely well that prices would possible come down. In these cases, customers clearly ended up paying just as a large amount. while there are also many others, who are coming up to see the full effects of the new tax regime and get a impartial picture of their costs and benefits, before hiking/steadying prices. Quite naturally, the current financial scenario against the GST background appears to be feels a enormous change phase, one that will take substantial time and steady attempt on the part of industry stakeholders, to be leveled out where everybody wins a piece of the GST slice. To be blunt, a lot in this industry depends on the wait-and-watch policy; as of now GST observance and an sympathetic of all its delicate shades is dominant and the only way forward to get used to the new tax arrangement flawlessly.

Overall Impact of GST will be positive on Restaurants.

As a relief - The GST on restaurants in five-star and lavishness hotels has been condensed to 18 per cent from 28 per cent, fetching it at par with separate air-conditioned (AC) restaurants. Even at some air-conditioned restaurants, the bills may come down, as GST will include service tax and value-added tax (VAT) that is at present charged as lined by Economic Times.

Additionally, the Food and Beverage (F&B) sector is going to have a unbiased to slightly optimistic crash due to GST with respect to the restaurant's earnings and services they offer. Owing to the high abatement rate of 60% in the sector, the in general tax comes close to 18.5-20.5% currently. Therein, a major crash will drop on AC restaurants inside 5-star and luxury hotels, which have involved a GST of a enormous 28%.

Technology in Implementation

Conclusion

More important, from the manufacturer and user viewpoint, this transform is going to have extensive crash on the industry as well cost to customers with respect upon the construction Of the industry and place of industry and customer. For that reason it happen to important to reform the industry and position depending upon the estimation of suggestion of GST on each type of dealings. The crash examination and preparation for reformation can be ended only after the proper implementation and understanding.
