A STUDY ON THE EMPLOYER BRANDING

PAWAN*

Employer branding is the process of:

- Positioning or promoting an organization
- To a desired group of talent/professionals
- As an employer of choice

Brand Vs Employer Brand:

In reality, a company only gets to have one brand. It's not as if you can have a consumer brand that targets consumers, an employer brand that targets employees, an investor brand that targets investors, and a vendor brand that targets vendors. We don't isolate our opinion of a company as an employer from our opinion of it as a product maker or service provider. Not surprisingly, employee loyalty and customer loyalty are highly correlated. It only makes sense to think of the brand holistically. Studies show a high correlation between consumer's admiration for a company's product and their willingness to work for that company and vice versa. Since there's only one brand for many targets, every department from HR to PR is thus, a stakeholder in your brand. They all have a responsibility to hold up their part of your company's reputation and their cohesion are critical. We can't have the HR people scurrying around building a brand that clashes with what the marketing people or the PR people are doing.

LITERATURE REVIEW:

There are a plenty of speculations about showcasing and marking, and an enormous number of writings examining corporate picture and corporate standing, be that as it may, there are a couple of hypotheses accessible concerning boss marking, particularly the linkage between boss brand and purchaser promoting specialized techniques. A brand was characterized as a name, term, sign, image or plan, or mix of them which is expected to distinguish the labor and products of one vender or gathering of merchants and to separate them from those of contenders (Gardner & Levy, 1995). Clark (1987) then again, offered another definition relating brands with values, for example brand is values that give the significant connection among buyers and advertisers, while Kapferer (1992) approaches brands under a comprehensive view. He guaranteed that a brand is certainly not a simple item. It is an item's embodiment and frequently marks are inspected through their part parts like brand name, logo, plan or bundling and so on as per Keller (1993) brand value raised the significance of brand in advertising correspondence technique and is regularly used to convince clients to purchase an item or administration. Be that as it may, as of late, particularly in today's serious market, boss marking is utilized to select and hold great representatives from an assorted work power. Most organizations will generally advance factors that make their firm a decent work environment and furthermore offering a splendid and lively office space, an ethos of coordinated effort and cooperation, adaptable working hours, creche offices, or even an astounding container.

Turning (1996) has thought that a decent work environment is accepted to deliver greater items, support more advancement, can draw in more skilled individuals, and experience less protection from change and lower turnover costs, all of which make an interpretation of straightforwardly into a superior main concern. As indicated by Sutherland, Torricelli, and Karg (2002), in associations gifted workers are difficult to draw in and hard to hold and it has become basic to business achievement. The business marking is utilized for corporate personality and notoriety which imparts its picture to current and expected workers. Luthans and Peterson (2002) have found representatives who are occupied with their association with fulfillment exhibit great execution and make progress. This assists the corporate supervisors with being more compelling and fruitful, which thusly builds the administrators self-adequacy. Exploration has shown that self-adequacy is emphatically connected to work execution, in that people with higher self-viability are bound to be proactive in starting work, and show supported exertion and assurance in their interest to accomplish the assignment, in any event, when issues happen. As per Robert and Dowling (2002), predominant performing firms have a more prominent shot at supporting better execution over the long run assuming they likewise have generally great notoriety. It is reliable with the developing assemblage of system research that joins great immaterial resources with supported unrivaled execution. Collins and Stevens (2002) have likewise expressed that early enlistment and publicizing might affect expanding the amount and nature of candidates. Fulmer, Gerhart and Scott (2003) have examined manager marking arrangements on top100 US organizations. They observed that business marking arrangements were related with stable and profoundly certain labor force mentalities as well as had impact on associations execution. Turban and Cable (2003) have contended that organizations higher in corporate social execution (CSP) have more sure notoriety and are more appealing businesses to representatives than firms lower in CSP. Such outcomes propose that potential candidates know about firms CSP and that those with more certain evaluations might enjoy serious benefits since they draw in more expected candidates than firms. Levinson (2007) additionally proposes that representatives who are glad in their work are bound to remain in that association, and observed that work commitment is fundamentally identified with authoritative responsibility.

III. Applied and THEORETICAL FOUNDATION OF EMPLOYER BRANDING Employer marking is the interaction to convey an association's way of life as a business in the commercial center. A business brand is the amount of the multitude of qualities and discernable highlights that planned applicants and current workers see about an associations business experience. The business experience fills in as the establishment of the business brand and incorporates unmistakable highlights like compensation, rewards and advantages, yet in addition reaches out to intangibles, for example, an associations culture, values, the board style and openings for worker learning, advancement and acknowledgment (Newell and Dopson, 1996 Hendry and Jenkins, 1997)

INTRODUCTION

The term —employer branding merely speaks to HR 's responsibility as a stakeholder for the overall brand. HR owns the task of conveying the brand in a compelling way to the labor market. It' s important to remember that your brand already exists. Employer branding is not about starting from scratch – trying to conjure up some positioning that you think employees will find engaging. You already have a culture, a vision, and values (and they 're all already being communicated by other departments). Your employees already have a certain attitude towards the company. Job seekers already have preconceptions.

The company 's professional reputation

- A description of company culture.
- News reports about the company, both good and bad.
- Word-of-mouth statements about the company.
- A description of the company 's future.
- How the employer 's brand compares to the competition.

Beyond conversation, it' s also a set of subjective candidate experiences, such as

- Applying for a job on your Web site or via e-mail.
- Interviewing for a position.
- Talking to employees and walking through the workplace sites.

- Using products, services, or customer help.
- The company 's impact in the candidate 's community

How a company treats its employees

- How workplace culture is
- What the chances of growth are
- What opportunities a company provides for personal development
- If the company has seen too many salary freezes
- What perks and benefits the company offers

A company with strong employer brand shows that it cares for people and values them. It has a long way to go
