Abstract:

Signs and symptoms give the knowledge of the disease. Vedana is that which is experienced by a person. A particular disease can have multiple lakshanas, not all the lakshanas are manifested in a person. When a person visits the physician, he expects results in the vedana which is troubling him the most. A particular Vedana could be used to indicate the involvement of the particular dosha, dushya and the place where dosha dushya sammurchana occurs. When a physician knows the dosha, dushya and the place where dosha dushya sammurchana occurs, a better treatment can be planned. As an illustration the Vedana Angamarda was taken up in this article. Padartha, Arthanvaya for the term Angamarda was compiled. Sandarbha and Reference for Angamarda in Charaka Samhita was compiled. From the procured data, analysis was done to find out the manifestation of the vedana Angamarda. A particular course was found for the manifestation of Angamarda.

Keywords: Vedana, Anukuula vedana, Pratikuula vedana, Angamarda, Samprapti

Introduction:

Knowledge of diseases is crucial for effective treatment planning. Diseases are identified by a variety of signs and symptoms that appear in a person as a result of a variety of events. A person's experience/ sensation is referred to as Vedana. When a person is diseased, the signs and symptoms experienced by him is nothing but the Vedana. The principles of Trividha bodhya samgraha in Ayurveda emphasizes that, when a Vaidya is unable to come to a definitive conclusion in naming and diagnosing an ailment, then therapy should be based on their respective nidana, lakshana and adhisthana.

In Ayurveda samhitas, vedana prakaras which are mentioned in various contexts seems synonymous and are not clearly understood. In some contexts, only the term vedana is mentioned because of which understanding the pathology becomes questionable. A particular vedana is seen in different stages of the disease like purvarupa, rupa, upadrava and also in certain contexts it is seen that more than one vedana prakaras have been mentioned which indicates that they are different from each other. A particular vedana could be used to indicate the intensity of involvement of particular dosha, association of the doshas, adhiṣṭhanas, probable place of manifestation and the course of samprapti which could be either avaraṇa janya or kṣaya janya. Manifestation of specific types of vedana could be owing to many factors such as dosha, etc., and their amsaamsa kalpana based on aggravation of particular guna in their respective ashaya. When a vaidya fully comprehends the role of the amsaamsa kalpana of the vedana prakaras, proper ubhaya pratyaneka chikitsa and target-oriented treatment can be implemented.

Angamarda is one among the rasa pradoshaja vikaras. It is seen as Purvarooapa in jvara and apasmara. It is seen as Lakshana in murcha, Gulma, shosha, rajayakshma, udara, arshas, pandu and visarpa. Here, an attempt is done to understand the samprapti of Angamarda.

Methodology:

- Padartha and arthaanvaya of the word Angamarda was found.
- Padartha includes all the possible meanings of the word “Angamarda”. This was collected from various Shabdhakoshas.
- Arthaanvaya means the applied/ contextual meaning.
- The term Angamarda was compiled from Charaka Samhita and tabulated under different headings like Sandarbha and Reference.

Review of Literature:

Review on Vedana

The word vedana is derived from the root word “Vid” dhatu. The meaning of the word “vid” is “jnana”. “Vedana” refers to, “that which gives knowledge”¹. The English meaning of the word vedana is Pain, torture, agony, Knowledge, perception, feeling, sensation².

Vedana can either be pratikuula vedana or anukuula vedana. Pratikuula vedana is the unpleasant sensation (Duhkha) and Anukuula vedana is the pleasant experience/ feeling (sukha). Sukha stands for arogya and Duhkha stands for vikara³.

As per Charaka Samhita Chikitsa Sthana eighteenth Adhyaya Vedana is nothing but pain⁴.

Review on Angamarda

Angamarda is one among the Rasapradoshaja Vikaaras. Angamarda has different meanings in Sanskrit shabdhakoshas like samvahaka, churnanam and angam mardayati⁵. The English meaning of the word Angamarda is Crushing, grinding, rubbing, destroying⁶

The term Angamarda was compiled from all the one twenty chapters of Charaka Samhita and tabulated under the headings of Sandarbha and Reference. Table 1: Shows the references of the Vedana Angamarda in Charaka Samhita.

The term "vedana" refers to what a person has experienced and hence provides knowledge about what has been experienced. Vedana is frequently associated with pain; However, it cannot be restricted to that. Vedana encompasses all of a person's experiences. It could be either joy or despair.

Vedana is commonly associated with suffering. Although the term vedana is commonly associated with pain in numerous situations, the application of Go – balivardha Nyaya reveals that Vedana also has other meanings such as sensation, experience, and feeling. This is not just applicable to Shaareera, but also to Manas.

It also has the connotation of "pain" in a few other instances. This remark is not incorrect because the grammatical root of the term vedana is jnana (vid jnane), which signifies knowledge gained through experience.

As explained in Tatparyakya vrutti (One among the Vakyartha Bodhaka Vrutti / Shabdhartha bodhaka vrutti) some words /sentences have several meanings. The meaning of that word/sentence is then determined based on the context. Similarly, the meaning of the term "Vedana" must be interpreted in light of the situation.

Anukuula vedana is thought to bring happiness, while pratikuula vedana brings grief. A certain vedana, on the other hand, may bring sadness at one point and happiness afterwards, or vice versa. As a result, the question of how to classify a vedana as Anukuula or Pratikuula arises. The outcome of the Vedana should be considered to properly understand this. The immediate result could be Anukuula, but if the latter consequence is Pratikuula, then that Vedana is Pratikula itself.

The dosha vikalpa as vaata vruddhi, pitta vruddhi, kapha kṣaya ⁷is obtained from the direct reference from Charaka Samhita Sutra sthana kiyanta shirasi adhyaya. There is a reference in Charaka Samhita Chikitsa sthana Rajayakshma chikitsitam adhyaya ⁸ which states that kshaya in Snigdha guna of Kapha results in Angamarda. Angamarda is seen as a lakshana, purvaroopta in vyadhis like jvara⁹, pandu¹⁰, arshas¹¹, which indicates that there is Agni dushti. It is a lakshana in rasa gata jvara lakshana¹² which indicates the involvement of rasa dhatu. Also, there is a reference in Charaka Samhita Chikitsa Sthana Rajayakshma chikitsa adhyaya which shows the involvement of rasa dhatu and shukra dhatu.

CONCLUSION

Based on the Tatparyakya shabdhartha bodaka vrutti and Go – balivardha Nyaya. We may understand that vedana refers to everything a person goes through or experiences, not simply suffering/ pain.

The anubandha (uttara kaala phala) should be employed along with karyaphala to identify whether a vedana is an anukuula vedana or a pratikuula vedana. Manas is also vital in determining whether or not a vedana is pratikuula or anukuula.

When one Dosha unites with various dushyas (rasa, rakta, mamsa, and so on) and goes to various aashayas, the vedana manifested changes.

Angamarda is a vedana that occurs when the Kapha dosha's Snigdha guna decreases, resulting in Vaata prakopa. The dosha vikalpa of, vaata vruddhi, pitta vruddhi and Kapha kshaya, as well as agni dushti, are required for the manifestation of angamarda.
